3. Program Components: An effective customer service program consists of several components. The following are those that have been identified for inclusion in our program.
 - 3.1. Service Standards: Service Standards are established behaviors, expectations, targets, and goals that support excellence in providing service and products to our customers. The county has determined certain standards are desirable and necessary to define our program. These standards are established for all employees and volunteers and focus on key areas. The following describes these key areas and the attached implementation plan provides details on what each standard is and how it is to be implemented.
 - 3.1.1. Accessibility: To meet customers' needs, products and services must be both accessible and easy to find. To assure accessibility, standards for location of services, time of operation, how services are provided, and member availability will be defined. The county is committed to providing customers with various practical mechanisms to facilitate access to our services and information how to receive them.
 - 3.1.2. Timeliness of Response: The delivery of products and services are often time sensitive and customers may have deadlines to meet. To assist customers in meeting deadlines, clear response times are necessary.
 - 3.1.3. Conduct: The key to delivering quality customer service is in the attitude that employees and volunteers exhibit when interacting with customers. Specific behavioral standards are necessary to assist employees and volunteers in providing consistent and positive service.
 - 3.1.4. Quality: The quality of products and services is critical to our customers. These will adhere to the individual departments' quality standards and specifications to assure consistency, performance and safety where applicable. Services, whether presented in person or in written correspondence, should be timely, accurate and presented in a clear, concise, and understandable manner.
 - 3.1.5. Resolution: It is important that employees and volunteers strive to meet the customers' expectations with an emphasis on what we can do to resolve the customer's issues. County products and services are provided to customers who request them as well as those we are required to provide due to health, safety or legal reasons.

Regardless, customers expect these products and services to meet their needs by being high quality and delivered in a timely, fair, and complete manner. It is the county's expectation that this will be accomplished. However, there will occasionally be times when this is not the case and the customers feel that they have not received the expected results or a resolution. For those customers whom we have not been able to satisfy through all other means, a customer complaint process will be established.

- 3.2. Accountability: Standards alone will not assure the success of a program. The county, at all levels, must hold employees and volunteers accountable by providing feedback and periodic monitoring of individuals and department compliance with our service standards. Minimally this should be provided to employees and volunteers during their annual evaluations and through annual department surveys.
 - 3.3. Communication: Communications with customers are key in providing an effective and successful program. It allows us to understand the customers' expectations and perceptions, while at the same time ensuring our products and services are consistent and as we represent them to be.
 - 3.4. Surveys: Customer satisfaction information is needed to continuously improve the way we serve our customers and meet their needs and expectations. Conducting surveys gives us a way to gather this information. Once analyzed, the data can serve as a significant catalyst for innovation and improvement to increase customer satisfaction. Each county department, in conjunction with a countywide plan, will at least biennially conduct a customer service survey, analyze the data, and publish the results.
 - 3.5. Employee Recognition/Awarding for Excellence in Customer Service: Rewarding employees and volunteers for providing excellent customer service is important. When acknowledged publicly, not only does the service become a model for others, but it also reinforces the value of the individuals and the jobs that they do.
 - 3.6. Training: To enhance our customer service program, a strong training program, conducted frequently and over an extended period, will be provided. Its goal will be to reinforce the standards and expectations of our program through education.
4. Periodic Review: The implementation plan will be developed, reviewed and revised from time to time by workgroups. The workgroups will be given the responsibility to address specific portions of the program, develop recommendations, work with the affected departments, and draft language for inclusion into the implementation plan.
